

About the Authors

Alison Bailey is Senior Lecturer in Agricultural Business Management. Her research focuses on the analysis of agricultural production systems and the relationship between agriculture, the environment and socio-economic criteria. This includes assessment of farmer decision making processes and motivations associated with different farming systems, agri-environment policy and the wider food supply chain, financial analysis of farming systems (primarily in relation to agri-environment policy), and the application of socio-economic principles and techniques for resource and environmental management.

Claudia Bell is Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Auckland. Her teaching and research specialties include sociology of food, national identity formulation as an everyday process, and international tourism. She has published books and articles on landscape tourism, nation branding, farmers' markets, small town promotion, world expos, collectors, and contemporary New Zealand art and artists. Her current research project is on tourists at Balinese cooking schools.

Charlotte Crow is an Adjunct Research Associate in the Monash Indigenous Centre. Her ongoing research explores the cultural politics of food, particularly in relation to colonisation and nationalism. She is currently resident in Cambodia, where she works as an advisor on heritage issues and in community arts development.

Philip Hayward is Deputy Pro Vice Chancellor (Research) at Southern Cross University (Australia), an adjunct professor at Pattimura University, Ambon (Indonesia) and editor of Shima: The International Journal of Research into Island Cultures.

Nigel Hemmington is Dean of the Faculty of Culture and Society at Auckland University of Technology. His research and consultancy interests are in the areas of consumer experiences, professional development and learning, and consumer behaviour in hospitality and tourism. He has published widely in academic and professional publications.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Mandy Hughes teaches Sociology and Media Studies at Southern Cross University. Her interests include food, culture and communication for development. She has previously worked in public broadcasting, as well as in the community sector for international and Australian non-government organizations in the areas of food security, community education and development effectiveness.

Sarah Keith teaches in the Department of Media, Music, Communication and Cultural Studies at Macquarie University, focusing on media production and music technology. Her research interests include cultural policy, music, and society; generative and algorithmic music composition; computer-mediated performance; and popular music.

Sueo Kuwahara is professor of anthropology at Kagoshima University (Japan). He is currently involved in research in the Amami and Tokara islands of southern Japan and is a member of the Editorial Board of Shima: The International Journal of Research into Island Cultures.

Nancy Lee is a PhD candidate with the Gender & Cultural Studies Department at the University of Sydney. Her work looks at how chefs embody gendered celebrity through their authoritative roles on television, Twitter, and in the print media. Her research interests include masculinities, feminism, popular culture, media studies, and eating food.

Lisa Milner is a lecturer at Southern Cross University, in the School of Arts and Social Sciences. Her research interests include community organisations, Australian film and television production, documentary filmmaking and national cinema, with a focus on the representation of working class and community groups. She is the Guest Editor of the special edition 'On the Table: the place of food in our culture', Australian Humanities Review no 51, 2011.

Lindsay Neill is Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Culture and Society, School of Hospitality and Tourism, AUT University, Auckland (New Zealand). Lindsay's research interests include cuisine-scapes, especially the relationship between fast food and vernacular culture, food as icon and student vocabulary levels.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

David Pearson is Associate Professor of Advertising and Marketing Communication with extensive international experience in research projects and development activities. He is responsible for the Advertising and Marketing Communications discipline at the University of Canberra as well as their Sustainability Development and Food Security Research Cluster. He is also an Adjunct Fellow at Australian National University in their Fenner School of Environment and Society. He has expertise in the economics and marketing of sustainable consumption to develop individual consumer choice. His recent research has focused on food security including regional, local and organic food systems.